What's NEW in medicine!

Big Advances, Smaller Incisions! Minimally Invasive Surgery Is Coming to City by the Sea Vet!

We're excited to announce a major investment in the future of veterinary care at City by the Sea Vet! We've recently added state-of-the-art rigid and flexible endoscopy equipment from VetOvation, allowing us to expand our surgical and diagnostic capabilities while making many procedures less invasive for our patients. Using tiny cameras and specialized instruments, our veterinarians will be able to perform a variety of procedures through small incisions or, in some cases, without making any incisions at all. This technology means less pain, smaller incisions, faster recovery times, and a quicker return to normal activities for many of our patients.

Over the coming months, we'll be introducing several exciting minimally invasive procedures, including laparoscopic spays, gastropexies (a procedure to help prevent life-threatening stomach twisting in dogs), abdominal biopsies, and the removal of retained testicles in cryptorchid pets. Our flexible endoscope will also allow us to examine the stomach and upper intestinal tract, obtain gastrointestinal biopsies, and potentially remove swallowed foreign objects without the need for traditional abdominal surgery. These techniques can often reduce surgical discomfort, minimize tissue trauma, and shorten recovery times compared with conventional approaches.

Why are we so excited? Because advancements like these allow us to provide a higher level of care while improving the experience for both pets and their families. Procedures that once required larger incisions and longer recoveries may now be accomplished using much less invasive techniques. This investment reflects our ongoing commitment to bringing modern veterinary medicine to our community and continually improving the care we provide. Stay tuned as we introduce these new services and share more about which pets may benefit from them!

Parasites: The Real Creepy-Crawlies This Spooky Season! by Dr. Kelly Ramos

When it comes to spooky season, creepy-crawlies are everywhere—and some of them can affect our pets, too! Fleas, ticks, heartworms, and intestinal parasites may not be as scary as ghosts and goblins, but they can certainly cause problems for our four-legged friends.

Some parasites are easy to spot, while others can quietly affect your pet without any obvious signs. That's why knowing what to look for—and how to prevent them—is so important.

The good news? There's nothing spooky about prevention! Year-round parasite prevention, routine fecal testing, and annual heartworm and tick-borne disease screening can help keep your pets happy, healthy, and protected through every season.

Want to know which parasites could be lurking, what they can do to your pet, and how to keep them away?

Check out our latest blog, "Parasites: The Bugs We Can See... and the Ones We Can't," to learn more about keeping these real creepy-crawlies away from your pets!
